METHODOLOGY

The 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development is “grounded in [...] international human rights treaties” and is informed, among others, by the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and UN Declaration on the Right to Development. It is guided by the “purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, including full respect for international law”.<sup>1</sup> The Agenda “seeks to realize the human rights of all”.<sup>2</sup>

The 2030 Agenda also explicitly seeks to ensure that no one is left behind, reflecting the fundamental human rights principle of non-discrimination. In order to ensure that no specific group of persons is left behind, the Agenda states that its follow-up and review processes should be informed by data which is high-quality, accessible, timely, reliable and disaggregated by income, sex, age, race, ethnicity, migration status, disability and geographic location and other characteristics relevant in national contexts.<sup>3</sup>

Given the explicit grounding of the 2030 Agenda in international human rights treaties, this matrix has been developed to demonstrate the links between the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) and the UN Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities (CRPD). The matrix is thus a tool to enable practitioners in the development and human rights fields, and organisations working specifically on issues relating to persons with disabilities, to begin to build their human rights-based approach to implementing and/or monitoring progress towards the achievement of the SDGs for persons with disabilities.

The matrix has been developed by the Danish Institute for Human Rights, in collaboration with the International Disability Alliance.

The methodology employed to link relevant provisions of the CRPD with relevant SDG targets is based on a number of key principles, as described below.

Human rights are indivisible and interdependent. Therefore, it is important that the linkages in this Matrix do not lead to a simplistic, narrow or compartmentalised interpretation of human rights. Rather, it aims to highlight some of the most immediate human rights links and implications of the SDGs and is thereby intended to serve as a starting point for further in-depth analysis and reflection. In order to develop this Matrix<sup>4</sup>, a number of considerations have been made in order to ensure the links between SDG targets and the provisions of the CRPD are as systematic and targeted as possible. The Matrix is intended to be user-friendly, and to be able to capture key linkages between the SDGs and the CRPD without being overly-general. The basic principles of the methodology used are as follows:

- It employs a human-rights based understanding of the main themes covered in the SDGs in accordance with the foundations of the 2030 Agenda in human rights treaties (see above). For example, poverty in Goal 1 is understood in line with the multi-dimensional concept of poverty endorsed by the UN Committee on Economic Social and Cultural Rights. Likewise, the themes of hunger and food security addressed in Goal 2 are approached through the lens of the human right to adequate food.
- It focuses only on the direct linkages between the CRPD and SDG targets, listing those rights/provisions/obligations whose realisation underpins the targets in question.
- Not all the provisions of CRPD have been included in the template. In particular, provisions concerning definitions, the administration of the CRPD and the establishment of a supervisory body, have been excluded.

There are also number of principles and rights enshrined in the CRPD that are so broadly applicable, or cross-cutting, that they could potentially apply to most, if not all, targets. The methodology adopts a pragmatic approach, aimed at ensuring that the inclusion of these principles and rights is as targeted as possible, so it remains a practical tool.

As a fundamental principle of human rights and a fundamental principle underlying the CRPD as a whole, the principle of non-discrimination must also be considered generally applicable to the 2030 Agenda and the SDGs in a cross-cutting manner. Due to broad applicability of the principle of non-discrimination and the need to limit the number of links displayed in this matrix to ensure maximum usability, relevant CRPD provisions on non-discrimination have not been displayed in relation to every target. They are only displayed where the specific wording of the target in question highlights the need to eliminate disparities. These provisions include those on equal enjoyment of fundamental human rights and freedoms (Article 1), general principles (Article 3), general obligations (Article 4), equality and non-discrimination (Article 5), women with disabilities (Article 6) and children with disabilities (Article 7). However, the principle of non-discrimination should nevertheless remain applicable across the board in line with the Human Rights-Based Approach.
